Appendix 1: The Structural Properties of Folk-Games and Modern Sport¹

Folk-Games	Modern Sports
1. Diffuse, informal organization implicit in the local social structure	Highly specific, formal organization, institutionally differentiated at the local, regional, national and international levels
2. Simple and unwritten customary rules, legitimated by tradition	Formal and elaborate written rules, worked out pragmatically and legitimated by rational-bureaucratic means
3. Fluctuating game-pattern; tendency to change through long-term and, from the viewpoint of the participants imperceptible 'drift'	Change institutionalised through rational-bureaucratic channels
4. Regional variation of rules, size and shape of balls, etc.	National and international standardization of rules, size and shape of balls, etc.
5. No fixed limits on territory, duration or numbers of participants	Played on a spatially limited pitch with clearly defined boundaries, within fixed time-limits, and with a fixed number of participants, equalized between the contending sides
6. Strong influence of natural and social differences on the game-pattern	Minimization, principally by means of formal rules, of the influence of natural and social differences on the game-pattern; norms of equality and 'fairness'
7. Low role differentiation (division of labour) among the players	High role differentiation (division of labour) among the players
8. Loose distinction between playing and 'spectating' roles	Strict distinction between playing and 'spectating' roles
9. Low structural differentiation; several 'game-elements' rolled into one	High structural differentiation; specialization around kicking, carrying and throwing, the use of sticks, etc.
10. Informal social control by the players themselves within the context of the ongoing game	Formal social control by officials who stand, as it were, 'outside' the game and who are appointed and certificated by central legislative bodies and empowered, when a breach of the rules occurs, to stop play and impose penalties graded according to the seriousness of the offence
11. High level of socially tolerated physical violence; emotional spontaneity; low restraint	Low level of socially tolerated physical violence; high emotional control; high restraint
12. Generation in a relatively open and spontaneous form of pleasurable 'battle-excitement'	Generation in a more controlled and 'sublimated' form of pleasurable 'battle-excitement'
13. Emphasis on physical force as	Emphasis on skill as opposed to physical

opposed to skill	force
14. Strong communal pressure to participate; individual identity subordinate to group identity; test of identity in general	Individually chosen as a recreation; individual identity of greater importance relative to group identity; test of identity in relation to a specific skill or set of skills
15. Locally meaningful contests only; relative equality of playing skills among sides; no chances of national reputation or money payment	National and international superimposed on local contests; emergence of elite players and teams; chance to establish national and international reputations; tendency to 'monetization' of sports

This, however, was an obstacle for a very short time, as the objecting parties gave way, and subsequently entered the field, though not without grumbling that, while the prizes were liberal, there was no provision made for the standards. This ought, in future, to be avoided, even if it be necessary to reduce the prizes' (28.7.43)	14 July 1843

Appendix 11: A New Song on the Wrestling Match Between Cann and Polkinghorne¹

When Polkinghorne did first agree,
And Cann the day did fix, Sir,
It was Ocober twenty-three,
In eighteen twenty-six, Sir,
And 'twas beside the Tamar stream
This wrestling was appointed,
You'd think the crowds they hither came
To see the Lord's anointed.

The seats were fastened well with clamps,
For gentlefolks to look on
Cornubia's son in stocking vamps,
And Cann, who had a shoe on;
And here were brothers, sons and dad,
Besides their num'rous friends, Sir,
With ev'ry man could mount a pad,
From Dorset to Land's End, Sir.

The men shook hands, Cann seized upon
His opponent's left shoulder,
And he as quickly fasten'd on
The elbow of the holder;
They both got hitched, when, oh, good lack!
Why who could have portended,
That in five minutes on his back
Cann thus should lay extended?

One Devon Tryer shook his head
With wisdom so profound, Sir,
He thought full sure that Cann was dead,
As he lay on the ground, Sir.
The Devon men sung out – “foul play,”
And made a hideous clatter,
While some roar'd out – “Why Aby, pray.”
“Why, Aby! What's the matter?”

Cann is a man of as good game,
As ever yet was born, Sir,
But has not weight nor strength to tame
The game of Polkinghorne, Sir,
These Cornishmen are such a breed,
I've freely made my mind up,

To set them down as Adam's seed,
Instructed by old Jacob.

But Cann rose up with half his crown,
His bones and feelings sore, Sir,
For Devon ne'er had seen him down
For nine long years before, Sir;
So after fifteen minutes pause,
They hitched again and try', Sir,
How soon they could decide the cause –
Who'd be old England's Pride, Sir.

Cann, like a donkey, kick'd away,
To spoil his understanders
But Polky's friends disliked such play,
And they're not geese nor ganders;
They said it might the dandies shock,
And give the doctors joy, Sir
But he must come the Cornish lock,
Ere he could throw their boy, Sir.

Polk caught Cann round the waist, to try,
The heave was his intent, Sir,
But he was ready instantly,
His aim for to prevent, Sir
Cann lock'd his foot right firm and fast,
Both acted very clever,
Polk could not heave – the time was past,
And both fell down together.

The Tryers, then, on either side,
They had a full hour's contest,
But as they could not it decide,
To toss they thought it was best;
'Twas Cann's hard fate to meet the loss,
Though sure as he was born, Sir,
He had a better chance at toss
Than tossing Polkinghorne, Sir.

Then, coming to the scratch, again,
Each man was very hearty,
They us'd their utmost pow'rs amain,
In hopes to please their party:
When Cann was thrown-what Devon felt
I need not here repeat, Sir,

But Polkinghorne got the belt,
And then rode in state, Sir.

A dreadful clamour then arose,
Devonia said – “No fall”, Sir,
‘Twas thought indeed they’d come to blows,
To make it but a foil, Sir.
So Polkinghorne was borne amain,
By all his friends desire, Sir,
But Devon wish’d him back again,
In hopes that he might tire, Sir.

The Alfred Journal did report
That it was not a fall, Sir,
And judging it by Devon sport,
It only was a foil, Sir,
But if his paper it had got,
In number such a fall, Sir
He’d think how hard had been his lot
To meet with such a foil, Sir.

Now Cann himself, as I’ve been told,
Says he was thrown for certain,
But Devon bets would want such gold –
My eye and Betty Martin!
With heavy hearts and packets light,
The Devon men departed,
The Cornishmen they were all right,
And for St Columb started.

I fear my song is much too long,
So pardon I must crave, Sir,
And my voice it is not strong,
This shall be the last stave, Sir,
So while the hero’s health you put,
To Devon I must say, Sir,
Though Cann can shuffle and can cut,
With Polk he cannot play, Sir.

(Sung to the tune of The Night I Married Susy, or The Coronation)
