The Architects of Eighteenth Century English Freemasonry, 1720 – 1740

Submitted by Richard Andrew Berman to the University of Exeter as a Thesis for the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy by Research in History
15 December 2010.

This thesis is available for Library use on the understanding that it is copyright material and that no quotation from the thesis may be published without proper acknowledgement.

I certify that all material in this thesis that is not my own work has been identified and that no material has previously been submitted and approved for the award of a degree by this or any other university.

R A Berman
Abstract

Following the appointment of its first aristocratic Grand Masters in the 1720s and in the wake of its connections to the scientific Enlightenment, ‘Free and Accepted’ Masonry rapidly became part of Britain’s national profile and the largest and arguably the most influential of Britain’s extensive clubs and societies. The new organisation did not evolve naturally from the medieval guilds and religious orders that pre-dated it, but was reconfigured radically by a largely self-appointed inner core. Freemasonry became a vehicle for the expression and transmission of the political and religious views of those at its centre, and for the scientific Enlightenment concepts that they championed. The ‘Craft’ also offered a channel through which many sought to realise personal aspirations: social, intellectual and financial.

Through an examination of relevant primary and secondary documentary evidence, this thesis seeks to contribute to a broader understanding of contemporary English political and social culture, and to explore the manner in which Freemasonry became a mechanism that promoted the interests of the Hanoverian establishment and connected and bound a number of élite metropolitan and provincial figures. A range of networks centred on the aristocracy, parliament, the magistracy and the learned and professional societies are studied, and key individuals instrumental in spreading and consolidating the Masonic message identified. The thesis also explores the role of Freemasonry in the development of the scientific Enlightenment.

The evidence suggests that Freemasonry should be recognised not only as the most prominent of the many eighteenth century fraternal organisations, but also as a significant cultural vector and a compelling component of the social, economic, scientific and political transformation then in progress.
Acknowledgment

I would like to express my thanks to Professors Jeremy Black, Nicholas Goodrich-Clarke, Martin Thomas and Andrew Prescott, and to Dr Andrew Pink, for reviewing early drafts of this thesis and for their helpful comments. I would also like to express my gratitude to Professors Henry French and Bill Gibson for their time and effort in reviewing and examining. Finally, may I also thank the staff of the Library at the United Grand Lodge of England, Great Queen Street, London, in particular, Diane Clements, Director, Martin Cherry, Librarian, and Susan Snell, Archivist, for their kind assistance.
Contents

Abstract ...................................................................................................................................... 2

Acknowledgment ....................................................................................................................... 3

Abbreviations ............................................................................................................................... 8

Introduction ................................................................................................................................ 10

Chapter One ................................................................................................................................. 19

English Freemasonry before the formation of Grand Lodge ....................................................... 19

Medieval English Freemasonry: an Economic Imperative ............................................................ 19

Non-Operative Masonry prior to the formation of Grand Lodge ............................................... 28

Randle Holme III and Thomas Tryon .......................................................................................... 35

Elias Ashmole .............................................................................................................................. 37

The Acception .............................................................................................................................. 40

John Aubrey and William Dugdale .............................................................................................. 45

Aubrey and the Wren Controversy ............................................................................................... 47

Robert Plot (1640-1696) ............................................................................................................. 52

Richard Rawlinson (1690-1755) ................................................................................................. 57

Randle Holme and Chester Freemasonry ..................................................................................... 59

The Ancient Lodge at York .......................................................................................................... 62

Late Seventeenth Century London Freemasonry ......................................................................... 67

Summary .................................................................................................................................... 68

Chapter Two ................................................................................................................................ 70

John Theophilus Desaguliers: Homo Masonicus ......................................................................... 70

Displacement and Poverty: an Insecure Childhood ..................................................................... 71

Oxford University, John Keill, and a Newtonian Education ...................................................... 78

London, Again .............................................................................................................................. 80

An Appliance of Science ............................................................................................................. 87

Matters Masonic .......................................................................................................................... 101

Through the Eyes of Others ........................................................................................................ 102

Summary ..................................................................................................................................... 109
Chapter Three ............................................................................................................. 111
Grand Lodge: The Inner Workings .............................................................................. 111
James Anderson and the authorship of the 1723 Constitutions ............................... 112
The Influence of Others .............................................................................................. 118
George Payne – A Known Unknown ......................................................................... 120
The Westminster and Middlesex Bench: a New Connection .................................... 129
Charles Delafaye, loyalty personified ......................................................................... 132
William Cowper and the 1719 Intake ....................................................................... 136
Nathaniel Blackerby ..................................................................................................... 139
The June 1721 Intake ................................................................................................. 147
The August 1724 Intake ............................................................................................. 152
The November 1727 Intake ....................................................................................... 153
The Bench and the General Bank of Charity .............................................................. 157
Summary - Power and Patronage ............................................................................... 163

Chapter Four .............................................................................................................. 165
Martin Folkes and the Professional Nexus .................................................................. 165
Folkes and the lodge at the Bedford Head ................................................................. 165
The Royal Society and the Horn Tavern .................................................................... 173
William Jones and William Stukeley ......................................................................... 180
Other Learned Societies ........................................................................................... 184
The Royal College of Physicians ............................................................................. 185
The Society of Apothecaries ...................................................................................... 186
The Society of Antiquaries ......................................................................................... 187
The Spalding Society .................................................................................................. 189
Summary ...................................................................................................................... 192

Chapter Five .............................................................................................................. 193
The Rise of the First Noble Grand Masters ............................................................... 193
Aristocratic Patronage ............................................................................................... 194
A Positive Press Personified ...................................................................................... 196
John, 2nd Duke of Montagu, (1690-1749) ................................................................. 201
Montagu, Freemasonry and the Military ...................................................................... 205
A Politically Convenient Grand Master .................................................................... 213
Philip, Duke of Wharton, (1698-1731) .................................................................... 218
An Inconvenience Incarnate ...................................................................................... 221
The Earl of Dalkeith, (1695-1751) ............................................................................ 228
Charles Lennox, 2nd Duke of Richmond & Lennox, (1701-1750) ......................... 231
The Successor Grand Masters .................................................................................... 246
Tables

Table 1. Grand Lodge Officers, 1718-30 119
Table 2. The First Charity Committee 158
Table 3. The Bedford Head Lodge - selected members 172
Table 4. The Noble Grand Masters 175
Table 5. Freemasons Proposing Freemasons as FRS 179
Table 6. The Society of Antiquaries 187
Table 7. The Gentlemen’s Society of Spalding 190