Women’s Writing and British Female Film Culture in the Silent Era

Submitted by Lisa Rose Stead to the University of Exeter as a thesis for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in English

In January 2011

This thesis is available for Library use on the understanding that it is copyright material and that no quotation from the thesis may be published without proper acknowledgement.

I certify that all material in this thesis which is not my own work has been identified and that no material has previously been submitted and approved for the award of a degree by this or any other University.

Signature_____________________________

I acknowledge the support of the Arts and Humanities Research Council in fully funding this doctoral research project (2007-2010).
Abstract

This thesis explores women’s writing and its place in the formation of female film culture in the British silent cinema era. The project focuses upon women’s literary engagement with silent cinema as generative of a female film culture, looking at materials such as fan letters, fan magazines, popular novels, short story papers, novelizations, critical journals and newspaper criticism.

Exploring this diverse range of women’s cinema writing, the thesis seeks to make an original contribution to feminist film historiography. Focusing upon the mediations between different kinds of women’s cinema writing, the thesis poses key questions about how the feminist film historian weighs original sources in the reclamation of silent female film culture, relative to the varying degrees of cultural authority with which different women commentated upon, reflected upon, and creatively responded to film culture.

The thesis moves away from conceptualization of cinema audiences and reception practices based upon textual readings. Instead, the thesis focuses upon evidence of women’s original accounts of their cinemagoing practices (fan letters) and their critical (newspaper and journal criticism) and creative (fiction writers) responses to cinema’s place in women’s everyday lives. Balancing original archival research with multiple overarching methodological frameworks—drawing upon fan theory, feminist reception theory, audience studies, social history and cultural studies—the thesis is attentive to the diversity of women’s experiences of cinema culture, and the literary conduits through which they channeled these experiences.

Shifting the recent focus in feminist silent film historiography away from the reclamation of lost filmmaking female pioneers and towards lost female audiences, the thesis thus constructs a nationally specific account of British women’s silent era cinema culture.
CONTENTS

List of Illustrations 7

Introduction 12

Chapter 1 Feminist Methodology and Female Film History 26
   Activated Reception 28
   ‘The Pictures Girl’: mapping the fan letter across female film culture 34
   Reception and resistance 45
   Re-representation in feminist film history 51
   Feminist approaches to consumption 56
   Negotiating the consumer/spectator double-bind 67

Chapter 2 British Women and Modernity 78
   Socioeconomic and technological development 80
   The public sphere and the circulation of “all social things” 83
   Leisure, modern female living and urban vision 93

Chapter 3 Female Film Criticism 104
   Close Up: ‘art, experiment and possibility’ 106
   H.D.: ‘the lump and the leaven’ 110
   Dorothy Richardson: the editorial ‘we’ 122
   Tabloid critics 134
   C.A. Lejeune: language, sincerity and the ‘exceptional audience’ 137
   Iris Barry and the Daily Mail 148
   Gendered Film Criticism 160

Chapter 5 Elinor Glyn and Authorial Stardom 196
   Glyn as author, 1900—1920 197
   Glyn goes to Hollywood 204
   Star-maker: Gloria Swanson and Aileen Pringle 219
   Publicizing authorial stardom 230
   Glyn as “The Champion of the British Film”, 1929—1932 238

Chapter 6 Modernist / Middlebrow: Virginia Woolf, Winifred Holtby and cinema 255
   Modernist / middlebrow authorship and cinema 256
   Woolf and ‘The Cinema’ (1926) 262
   Holtby: cinemagoing female characters 269
   Super cinema escapism 275
   Cinemagoing spinsters and widows 280
The Crowded Cinema: marital pressure and cinematic lessons 288

Chapter 7 British Fan Magazines and Female Readers 299
  Fan magazine femininity 311
  The subject of fan discourse 324
  Fan poetry and female stars 334

Chapter 8 Fan Writing and Female Stardom 341
  The problem of female stars 348
  British star systems and actresses 352
  Fan responses to female stars 363

Chapter 9 Female Film Culture and Popular Genre: crime writing, serials and stars 385
  Crime as a popular genre 386
  Crime in the fan magazine 390
  Screen-to-magazine prose tie-in serializations 401
  Destabilizing resolution 411

Conclusion 417

Appendix A: Elinor Glyn Chronology 1846—1930 420
Appendix B: Featured Picturegoer Stars 423
Appendix C: Magazine coverage relative to fan contribution 424
Appendix D: Nationality of featured stars 425

Works Cited 427
Webliography 449
Filmography 451