"FOUR-FOLD VISION SEE": ALLEGORY IN THE POETRY OF EDMUND SPENSER AND WILLIAM BLAKE

I give you the end of a golden string,
Only wind it into a ball:
It will lead you in at Heavens gate,
Built in Jerusalems wall.

William Blake, Jerusalem plate 77

ELIZABETH JANE DARNILL
“Four-fold vision see”: Allegory in the Poetry of Edmund Spenser and William Blake.

Two volumes: volume one of two.

Submitted by Elizabeth Jane Darnill, to the University of Exeter as a thesis for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy by Research in English Literature, March 2010.

This thesis is available for Library use on the understanding that it is copyright material and that no quotation from the thesis may be published without proper acknowledgement.

I certify that all material in this thesis which is not my own work has been identified and that no material has previously been submitted and approved for the award of a degree by this or any other University.

…………………………………………………………………………………...
This thesis examines the role of readerly engagement in the allegorical poetry of Edmund Spenser and William Blake. An analysis of their poetry reveals important affinities between the two poets. Not only was Blake aware of Spenser’s work, he can be seen to incorporate and build upon Spenser’s self-conscious poetic style in order to engage readers in the active process of interpretation. Meaning in their poetry can be shown to unfold gradually by way of complex interactions between the reader and the text, interactions fostered by the reader’s imagination and the (differently) visual quality of the two poets’ works. Blake promotes this way of seeing as being “four-fold,” the ability to perceive on several dimensions.

The first chapter of this thesis looks at the definitions and attitudes towards allegory from the early sixteenth century onwards, showing how the mode has been constantly redefined. Chapter two investigates the self-conscious nature of allegory through an analysis of the placement of words, metaphors, unconventional language, and the way the poems may be read by readers. Both poets encourage a heightened awareness of the process of reading which may be termed allegorical. Blake owned his own printing press allowing him greater control over the words and design of his text. This enabled him to be more forceful in his communication of images and ideas than Spenser. Chapter three focuses upon the multiple (and contradictory) ways in which the text may be interpreted by the reader. Allegory is a means of communicating and simultaneously disguising criticism. Both poets can be seen to use it to voice resistance to forms of authority, even as they encourage readers to recognise these meanings within their texts. Spenser and Blake had to combat different forms of censorship with differing strategies. Whereas Spenser felt compelled to uphold the status quo, Blake sought to deconstruct rigid social conventions. Chapter four explores the relation between allegory and the imagination. Spenser uses allegory to inspire the imagination, whereas for Blake the imagination encourages allegory. The imagination is a means of pushing readers towards further learning and a deeper appreciation of allegorical meaning. Chapter five analyses Spenser and Blake’s verbal and imagistic visuality in relation to allegory. Blake’s illustrations promote further reader engagement, while Spenser’s illuminations are a part of his metaphorical and allegorical text. Both poets use the visual to trigger imaginative readerly interaction and to promote new ways of perceiving and relating to their poems.
Contents

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Acknowledgements</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Illustrations</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abbreviations</td>
<td>9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Critical Reflections on Spenser and Blake</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blake’s reflections on Spenser</td>
<td>23</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blake’s Characters in Spenser’s Faerie Queene</td>
<td>26</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Emblems: a basis for allegorical and visual reading</td>
<td>36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Structure and outline: the content and limitations of this thesis</td>
<td>55</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chapter One: On Allegory</td>
<td>61</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spenser’s “darke conceit”: Allegory in the sixteenth century</td>
<td>63</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spenser’s allegorical Faerie Queene</td>
<td>73</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The space in between: the seventeenth century</td>
<td>81</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Allegory in the eighteenth century</td>
<td>86</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spenser in the eighteenth century</td>
<td>91</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Allegory and the symbol</td>
<td>96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blake’s “four-fold vision”</td>
<td>98</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Allegory in the twentieth century and beyond</td>
<td>106</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chapter Two: Allegory and Language</td>
<td>121</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Censorship, propaganda and interpretation</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“Sharpen my dull tong”: Spenser’s allegory</td>
<td>135</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The biting tongue of the Blatant Beast</td>
<td>138</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“Be bolde … but not too bolde”: allegorical re-reading as relearning</td>
<td>144</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“A book that all may read”: Blake’s allegorical re-reading</td>
<td>153</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“Tearing” the book</td>
<td>158</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“Me-tals”: letters testing the mind’s mettle</td>
<td>162</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Endless work: impulsive vision within disciplined allegorical reading</td>
<td>168</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blake’s struggle against the “mind-forg’d manacles” of slavish censorship</td>
<td>171</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chapter Three: Allegory, Resistance and the Reader</td>
<td>179</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spenser’s Faerie Queene – mirroring grace and majesty</td>
<td>181</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Book Five: stretching the limits of allegory and Justice</td>
<td>197</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Courtliness and courtesy</td>
<td>205</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Transgression defies containment: the breakdown of Spenser’s allegory?</td>
<td>215</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“In soot I sleep”: Blake’s allegorical reassessment of social attitudes</td>
<td>223</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Blake’s allegorical re-writing of the Bible</td>
<td>243</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chapter Four: Allegory and the Imagination</td>
<td>253</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
The sixteenth-century imagination
Imagination in The Faerie Queene
The Faerie Queene as a “glassy globe”
Calidore’s vision of the Graces on Mount Acidale
The evolution of “fancy” and “imagination”
Blake’s imagination
Albion in Jerusalem – an allegory of the fallen mind
Golgonooza: city of imagination
Blake’s sublime imagination
The Vortex: using the sublime to guide reader’s to new perspectives
Spenser and Blake: the limits of the allegorical imagination

Chapter Five: Allegory and the Visual
Spenser: the “Poet of the Painters”
The Bower of Bliss as a process of allegorical visualisation
John Bender’s visualisation of Spenserian “pictorialism”
Vision in Isis Church
Medieval influences on Blake’s illuminated verse
Ut pictura poesis – debating the integration of art and poetry
The hidden or veiled within the process of unveiling and enlightenment
Blake and Spenser’s “four-fold vision”
Turning full circle: The textual-imagistic nature of Blake’s work

Afterword: Visual Allegory: Arthur’s Shield and Albion’s Sleep

Bibliography
Acknowledgements

This thesis would not have been completed without the help of many individuals and several organisations. Firstly, I would like to thank Charlie Page, who kindly gave me a fragile and beautiful early nineteenth-century volume of The Poets of Great Britain, containing John Hughes’s “Essay on Allegorical Poetry,” which served as a starting point for my reassessment of Spenser and allegory within the eighteenth century. This little book has accompanied me throughout the last four years, from Exeter to Edinburgh, quietly inspiring me to write and providing me with a tangible link to the past. My thanks also go to the English Department at the University of Exeter. I could not have found a friendlier and more encouraging environment in which to discuss my ideas. Particular thanks go to Professor Ashley Tauchert for taking the time to talk to me about Blake, to Dr. Angelique Richardson for her cheerful encouragement during my first year, and to Morwenna Hussey for helping me with numerous forms and applications.

I wish to thank The Arts and Humanities Research Council for the generous grant enabling me to undertake this project and for their support over the years. Thanks also go to The British Library, and especially to The National Library of Scotland, which became a haven and a second home for a while. I doubt there is a more peaceful place in Edinburgh in which to read and research. Thanks go to Liz Stacey at the National Trust for allowing me to use The Characters in Spenser’s Faerie Queene by Blake, an image which first inspired me to look at the work of both poets together.

I would also like to thank my mother, Stephanie Darnill, for proof reading the final draft of the thesis. Many more errors would appear in the text had it not been for her careful eyes and her searching questions.

Most especial and wholehearted thanks go to my tutor, Dr. Karen Edwards. Kind, intelligent and perceptive, Karen has carefully guided, encouraged and inspired me. Without her, these chapters would remain unwritten.

Finally, I dedicate this thesis to my brother, Andrew Darnill, whose gentle nature, wit and intelligent insight I miss every day.
Illustrations

William Blake’s illuminated verse and is reproduced from William Blake: The Complete Illuminated Books, introduced by David Bindman. Every effort has been made to trace and acknowledge copyright.

Figure
1. All Religions Are One, first principle (c. 1788), by William Blake. The Huntington Library, San Marino, California.

15. The frontispiece to Europe a Prophecy (1794), by William Blake. Reproduced by permission of the University of Glasgow Library, Department of Special Collections.

20. The frontispiece to Jerusalem (c. 1804-1820). Yale Center for British Art, Paul Mellon Collection.

Abbreviations

Spenser’s Work

- FQ: The Faerie Queene
- SC: The Shepheards Calender
- View: A View of the Present State of Ireland

Blake’s Work

- A: America
- E: Europe
- EG: The Everlasting Gospel
- BA: The Book of Ahania
- BL: The Book of Los
- BU: The Book of Urizen
- FZ: The Four Zoas
- J: Jerusalem
- M: Milton
- MHH: Marriage of Heaven and Hell
- SI: Songs of Innocence
- SE: Songs of Experience
- VLJ: A Vision of the Last Judgement

Common Abbreviations

- E: Erdman, ed. The Complete Poetry and Prose of William Blake
- ODNB: The Oxford Dictionary of National Biography
- OED: The Oxford English Dictionary, 2nd ed.
- PL: Paradise Lost
- PP: The Pilgrim’s Progress
- Sp Enc: The Spenser Encyclopaedia