

Negotiating the work-family nexus:
Examining identity work in the lives of lone parents

Submitted by Rachel Shona Gibson to the University of Exeter as a thesis for the degree of
Doctor of Philosophy in Management Studies
In September 2012

This thesis is available for Library use on the understanding that it is copyright material and that no quotation from the thesis may be published without proper acknowledgement.

I certify that all material in this thesis which is not my own work has been identified and that no material has previously been submitted and approved for the award of a degree by this or any other University.

Signature:

Abstract

This thesis offers a critical analysis of the everyday experiences and identity work of employed lone parents. Research on lone parents has been dominated by studies which focus on their experiences of unemployment (Haux, 2010; Chambaz, 2001; Speak, 2000). In comparison, the experiences of those lone parents whose histories are more likely to reflect time in work, rather than time out of work, have continued to be marginalised (Coyne, 2002; Ridge and Millar, 2011). Lone parents face the burden of childcare responsibilities without the support of a second parent, yet, they are still expected to engage with employment (Davies, 2012). A greater understanding of how they negotiate their work and family responsibilities is therefore required.

In this study, the concept of 'identity' was utilised to explore and analyse the experiences of employed lone parents. Both family and employment discourses provide critical (often contradictory) resources for identity construction (Thomas and Davies, 2005; Haynes, 2008), suggesting that an examination of how lone parents construct a sense of self is crucial in considering their everyday experiences. As concerns regarding inequality were found to be significant in previous studies on lone parents (Wallbank, 1998; May, 2003; 2004b; 2008b), a conceptual framework was required that could help identify experiences of marginalisation, as well as the influences of dominant discourses. 'Identity' was considered to be a "practice of improvisation within a scene of restraint" (Butler, 2004: 1), with the notion of identity work used to investigate this practice.

An in-depth qualitative approach, including semi-structured interviews and daily diaries, was utilised to collect data from fifteen participants from the South West of England and the London/Greater London areas. Based on the analysis and findings of this research, the lone parent participants were seen to be positioned awkwardly within discourses concerning work and family. Because of this, the process by which they constructed a coherent sense of identity was complex. Participants were seen to engage with different types of identity work in order to negotiate the paradox they faced as primary carers and providers. Considering the findings of this research, a number of implications were drawn in how this type of family may be supported more effectively within the workplace.

Contents

List of Tables	9
----------------------	---

Chapter 1: Introduction

1.1	Opening remarks	10
1.2	Why study lone parents and employment?	11
1.3	Aim and objectives of the study	13
1.4	Methodology.....	15
1.5	Thesis structure.....	17

Chapter 2: Lone parents and employment: a literature review

2.1	Introduction	20
2.2	Defining the 'lone parent'	21
2.3	Lone parents, employment and social policy in the UK	23
2.3.1	Developing policy: exploring the Department for Work and Pensions' (DWP) studies on lone parents and employment.....	26
2.3.2	The 'social value' of employment in policy discourses	29
2.4	Challenges and issues facing working parents from both lone and dual-parent families	30
2.4.1	Absence from the workplace	31
2.4.2	Geographical considerations in maintaining employment	33
2.4.3	Organizational cultures	34
2.4.4	The 'good' employee: working hours, 'flexibility' and gender implications	38
2.4.5	Organising work and family: 'work-life balance' and 'family friendly' policies	41
2.4.6	Technology and work: physical visibility versus virtual visibility	43
2.4.7	The quantification of time in regard to work and family	46
2.4.8	'Choice' in negotiations of work and family	48

2.5	Conclusion	49
-----	------------------	----

Chapter 3: The concept of identity in the lives of working lone parents

3.1	Introduction	52
3.2	The concept of identity	53
3.3	Functionalist approaches to the study of identity	56
3.3.1	Social Identity Theory and Identity Theory	56
3.3.2	Role theory	61
3.4	Interpretivist approaches to the study of identity	65
3.4.1	Narratives of the self	65
3.4.2	Identity work	68
3.5	Critical approaches to the study of identity	75
3.5.1	Identity regulation	76
3.5.2	Power and resistance in identity construction	78
3.5.3	Performativity, recognition and the 'intelligible' subject	81
3.6	Constructing a framework	85
3.6.1	Approach 1: Dominant discourses, norms and expectations	86
3.6.2	Approach 2: The 'intelligible' subject and the 'other'	87
3.6.3	Approach 3: Identity work for primary carers and providers	88
3.7	Conclusion	90

Chapter 4: Research design and methodology

4.1	Introduction	93
4.2	Research setting and orientation: presenting the aim and objectives of this study	93
4.3	Research approach and research paradigm	96
4.3.1	Applying a feminist methodology to the study of lone parents: addressing the contributions and potential limitations	98
4.3.2	Critical Management Studies (CMS)	101
4.3.3	Qualitative and quantitative research	104
4.3.4	Planning and strategy	107

4.4	The research design and research instruments.....	108
4.4.1	Sampling choices.....	108
4.4.2	The research field	112
4.4.3	Research instrument 1: the qualitative interviews	114
4.4.4	Research instrument 2: the daily diaries	117
4.4.5	Critical analysis of the research design and research instruments..	121
4.5	Research evaluation and ethical considerations.....	129
4.6	Data management and analysis	134
4.7	Conclusion	137

Chapter 5: Analysis and findings

5.1	Introduction	138
5.2	Understandings and experiences of family and parenthood.....	138
5.2.1	Stereotyping the lone parent: unemployment and 'poor' parenting..	139
5.2.2	The meaning of family	143
5.2.3	Constructions of the good parent	146
5.2.4	'Am I a lone parent or am I parenting alone?': resistance to the lone parent label	149
5.2.5	'Doing it on your own': ideals of independence and control	151
5.3	Understandings and experiences of employment.....	155
5.3.1	Formal support policies versus informal working arrangements	160
5.3.2	The meaning of work	169
5.3.3	Employment ambition and progression: the issue of working hours	176
5.3.4	Lone parenthood as a potential barrier to progression.....	181
5.3.5	Negotiating workplace expectations.....	186
5.3.6	Informal exclusion.....	191
5.4	Constructing a work-family routine	194
5.4.1	The importance of a good work-family routine	195
5.4.2	Maintaining a stable work-family routine	198
5.4.3	The restrictions of a 'regimented' work-family routine	200

5.4.4	Understanding ‘work-life balance’ and ‘work-family conflict’.....	202
5.4.5	Separating work and family versus integrating work and family.....	205
5.5	Conclusion	210

Chapter 6: Discussion

6.1	Introduction	212
6.2	What it means to be a working lone parent: Negotiating the maelstrom of discourses	212
6.3	Seeking recognition as both carers and providers	220
6.4	Understanding identity work in the everyday experiences of working lone parents	223
6.4.1	Moral identity work	224
6.4.2	Habitual identity work.....	228
6.4.3	Paradoxical identity work.....	231
6.5	Organizational and managerial considerations in supporting working lone parents	238
6.5.1	Policy considerations for working lone parents	238
6.5.2	Supporting lone parents through a paradoxical approach to management.....	245
6.6	Conclusion	252

Chapter 7: Conclusion

7.1	Introduction	254
7.2	The rationale revisited.....	254
7.3	Summary and implications of the research findings	256
7.4	Limitations of the study	261
7.5	Future research.....	263
7.6	Concluding remarks	264

Appendices

Appendix 1: Department for Work & Pensions' studies on lone parents and employment.....	266
Appendix 2: Ethical approval form.....	269
Appendix 3: Work histories of participants.....	271
Appendix 4: The 'lone parent' in the media.....	286
Appendix 5: Diary example.....	288

Bibliography	291
---------------------------	-----

Tables

Table 1: Research methods used in previous lone parent studies.....	105
Table 2: Overview of participants.....	113
Table 3: Detailed overview of participants' situations.....	157-159
Table 4: The rhetoric behind part-time or full-time working hours.....	177