British Settler Emigration in Print: Mainstream Models and Counter-Currents, 1832-1877

Submitted by Judith Isabel Piesse, to the University of Exeter as a thesis for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in English, November 2012.

This thesis is available for Library use on the understanding that it is copyright material and that no quotation from the thesis may be published without proper acknowledgement.

I certify that all material in this thesis which is not my own work has been identified and that no material has previously been submitted and approved for the award of a degree by this or any other University.
Abstract

During the nineteenth century an unprecedented number of emigrants left Britain, primarily for America, Australia, Canada, and New Zealand. Recent historical scholarship has argued that these predominantly Victorian mass migrations belong to an even larger history of “Anglo” migration, characterized by its global reach and ideological investment in settlement. Situating my approach in relation to this wider framework, this thesis argues that Victorian periodicals played a key and overlooked role in both imagining and mediating the dramatic phenomenon of mass British settler emigration. As I argue in chapter 1, this is both owing to close historical and material links between settler emigration and the periodical press, and to the periodical’s deeper running capacities to register and moderate forms of modern motion. While most novels do little to engage with emigration, turning to periodicals brings to light a large range of distinct settler emigration texts and genres which typically work with cohesive spatio-temporal models to offset the destabilizing potentiality of emigrant mobility. Moreover, many now canonical texts originally published in periodicals can be situated alongside them; presenting opportunities to produce fresh readings of works by Charles Dickens, Anthony Trollope and others which I incorporate throughout.

My first three chapters focus on settler emigration genres which circulated across a range of mainstream, predominantly middle-class periodicals: texts about emigrant voyages, emigration-themed Christmas stories, and serialized novels about colonial settlement. I argue that these texts are cohesive and reassuring, and thus of a different character to the adventure stories often associated with Victorian empire. The second part of my thesis aims to capitalize on the diversity and range which is a key feature of Victorian periodicals by turning to settler emigration texts that embody a feminized or radical perspective, and which often draw upon mainstream representations in order to challenge their dominant formations.
Contents

Acknowledgements 5

List of Illustrations 6

Introduction 8

Part 1: Mainstream Models

Chapter 1: “A Fountain-of-motion”: Dangerous Currents and Safe Channels 42

Chapter 2: Dreaming Across Oceans: Emigration and Nation at Christmas 87

Chapter 3: Serial Settlement 129

Part 2: Counter-Currents

Chapter 4: Feminine Perspectives 172

Chapter 5: Radical Rewrites 228

Conclusion 277

Appendix: List of Periodical Titles Referenced 287

Works Cited 290
Acknowledgements

I am grateful to acknowledge the Arts and Humanities Research Council for funding both my PhD project at the University of Exeter (grant number AH/H019243/1) and an additional three-month fellowship at the John W. Kluge Center, Library of Congress, where I carried out research towards chapter 5 in 2012. Many thanks are also due to the Research Society for Victorian Periodicals for awarding me the 2012 VanArsdel Prize for an essay based on sections of chapter 2, to the British Association of Victorian Studies for allowing me a presenter’s bursary to deliver a conference paper which informs chapter 3, and to the Leverhulme-funded network Commodity and Culture in the Colonial World, 1851-1914: Travel, Technology and Transformation for funding attendance at workshop events in 2010 and 2011. Adapted sections of chapters 2 and 3 will now appear in Victorian Periodicals Review (Spring 2013) and the forthcoming edited collection Antipodal Homes: Colonial Domestic Fiction in Australia and New Zealand (ed. Tamara S. Wagner).

I am also thankful to the many mentors, colleagues, and friends who have provided support and advice at different stages of this project’s development. For their guidance on draft versions of the thesis, scholarly direction, or general support, I would like to particularly thank Regenia Gagnier, Paul Young, Gregory Vargo, Marian Diamond, Philip Steer, Tamara Wagner, Josephine McDonagh, Michael Cohen, Isobel Armstrong, Oana Godeneau-Kenworthy, Adriana Brodsky, and, as always, Robbie Uprichard. I would also like to thank the University of Exeter, and all the librarians at the University of Exeter Special Collections and the Library of Congress who helped with my research.
List of Illustrations

5. Images of portable camp furniture featured in Randolph B. Marcy’s Prairie Traveler: The 1859 Handbook for Westbound Pioneers.

7. Illustrations accompanying “Harry Heathcote of Gangoil” in the Graphic 25 December 1873.

