Publication record		“Because in fact we can do that.” (Interview 01) (Publishing) “Definitely encouraged. I definitely know that that is part of my role but it is purely lack of time. And probably, you know, lack of experience doing that.” (Interview 03) “I would like to perceive them to see the work that I do as worthwhile, but I think that respect has to be earned. And I think the only way that that can be earned is probably by publishing and presenting.” (Interview 04) “You need to be fairly inspired I think to know that you’re going to write on a subject matter and it be interesting to others.” (Interview 04) “So, that was my sort of first sort of proactivity, and in terms of trying to find a way for myself to be able to get involved in more research.” (Interview 05) “I think the ones that are successful in research and you know, that go the extra mile in terms of doing conference presentations and all that kind of stuff, it’s inevitable it’s going to encroach on their own time. I think it’s one of those decisions and choices that we have to make.” (Interview 05) “And so, the sort of ways of disseminating...you know, I think it’s really important for the consultant group...the consultants to be able to have some way of saying, ‘Have you seen this paper? This is really interesting’.” (Interview 11) “And that’s always been an issue, actually, and I think I see other people. They do lots of data...data collection. They set things up. They actually analyse data and then they sort of loose it almost when it comes to writing up. And I think so much it gets done really good enough but it just never gets published or never even gets written up properly....But it shouldn’t be that difficult. I guess, you know, with hard work that should be being done really.” (Interview 14) “I’ve done two presentations but it wasn’t actually on my work. It was more of my role when I was an advanced practitioner and it was a local thing.” (Interview 19 – anti research domain) “You know what I think is we probably are doing the research but because we’re not publishing it.... We are doing research but unless you see it in professional journals, it’s sort of like you’ve not done anything.” (Interview 21)
Research user		“I mean that’s something that we do all the time. You know, we’re looking at that, we’re looking at all the guidelines that comes out, reviewing that and that’s something that we do as a sort of clinical team in a way, myself, the radiologist are very much involved in that formal kind of professional lead point of view.” (Interview 16 - anti research domain)

		“I think, you know, you wouldn’t set up a new service without looking into what is happening and we do sort of a ...service. So we’ve done quite a lot of reading around that and looked at how people have set up services in the past. But I think, you know, things like ..., we changed our ... based on, you know, current evidence and that sort of thing, I think.” (Interview 16 - anti research domain) “I hugely enjoyed the process, you know, of being the principal investigator for this project.” (Interview 18)
Feedback to practice		But actually, we’re not really reviewing new stuff coming out and we should be.” (Interview 14) “And I headed up that audit and we drew up a new protocol as a result of that changed our practice. I’ve got a few presentations after that actually.” (Interview 18) “I think a quite a big component of my job is your service evaluation so there is always something going on even if it’s only small-scale. Even if it’s looking up data retrospectively, we always try to evaluate the service. For example, we received; a colonography has just come in. And we are having trouble sort of meeting the demand and we sort of auditing practise to see where we can, you know, reduce our referral rate and that kind of stuff. We’re always doing something.” (Interview 21)
