Contents

Abbreviations and Note on the Text (page 9)

Acknowledgements (page 12)

Introduction: The Fundamental Importance of Judaism for Tillich (page 13)

1. Prior Treatments of Tillich and Judaism: Earley, Stone and Weaver (page 24)
   1.1 The Earley Dissertation: Tillich's 'Protestant Principle' and the 'Spirit of Jewish Prophetism' (page 24)
   1.1.1 Dissertations on Schelling
   1.1.2 The Spirit of Jewish Prophetism as the Mirror Image of the Protestant Principle
   1.2 Ronald H. Stone's Paul Tillich's Radical Social Thought (page 37)
   1.2.1 Friedrich Schelling
   1.2.2 The 1910 Dissertation
   1.2.3 The 1912 Dissertation
   1.2.4 The Spirit of Judaism
   1.2.5 Anti-Semitism
   1.2.6 Anti-Semitism and Zionism
   1.3 Matthew Lon Weaver's Religious Internationalism: War and Peace in the Thought of Paul Tillich (page 50)
   1.3.1 Tillich as Pious Nationalist before World War I
   1.3.2 Other References to Schelling and Tillich's Social Critique
   1.3.3 Tillich as Forced Emigré Interprets Interwar Germany and Europe
   1.3.4 Tillich's Message to his Audience in the United States
   1.3.5 Weaver's Critique of Tillich's Ethics of War and Peace
   1.4 Conclusion (page 62)

2. The Importance of Dialectic for Tillich, and the Contrast with Aryan Christianity (page 67)
   2.1 Tillich's Dialectical Method (page 68)
   2.2 The Dialectical Structure of Tillich's Systematic Theology (page 74)
   2.3 The Two Types of Dialectic Traced Through Primary Source Analysis (page 78)
   2.4 Aryan Christianity and the Racialized History of Religions (page 80)
      2.4.1 Heschel's Aryan Jesus and the Influence of Aryan Christianity
   2.4.2 Theological Revisionism and Curriculum Reform
   2.5 Conclusion (page 91)
3. Schelling's Cosmic Dialectic and the Foundational Role of Judaism (page 93)

3.1 The Importance of Schelling for Tillich (page 94)
  3.1.1 Schelling’s Context, Sources and Main Ideas
  3.1.2 Tillich’s Appropriation of Schelling
  3.1.3 Schelling’s Works on the Positive Philosophy

3.2 The 1910 Dissertation: Judaism as the Unique Foundation for Christianity (page 113)
  3.2.1 The Doctrine of the Potencies and the Importance of Contradiction within the Dialectical Process
  3.2.2 The History of Religion and the Emergence of the Religious Consciousness
  3.2.3 Tillich’s Analysis of Judaism

3.3 The 1912 Dissertation: Judaism as the Dialectical Opponent of Paganism and the Source of Christianity (page 144)

4. Jewish Prophetism Provides a Unique Dialectical and Ontological Basis for Justice (page 154)

4.1 World War I and Religious Socialism (page 158)
  4.1.1 Other Tillich Essays on Related Topics

4.2 The 1920s: The Religious Situation (page 164)
  4.2.1 Religious Socialism
  4.2.2 Belief-ful Realism
  4.2.3 Judaism: An Ally to Capitalism

4.3 The 1930s: The Socialist Decision (page 179)
  4.3.1 The Contradictions of Polytheism, or ‘Might Makes Right’
  4.3.2 The Exile and the Elevation of Time over Space
  4.3.3 Prophetic Transformation of the Powers of Origin
  4.3.4 Jewish Prophetism and the ‘Jewish Problem’ of Nationalism

4.4 The Symbol of Expectation as the Basis for the Socialist Principle (page 206)

4.5 Prophetism, Internationalism and Economic Globalization (page 210)
  4.5.1 The Transformation of Nationalism
  4.5.2 The Transformation of ‘Autarky’ and the Elevation of Time

4.6 Conclusion (page 216)

5. The Judenfrage Lectures: The Dialectic of the Holy and the Permanent Theological Importance of Judaism (page 219)

5.1 Existential Participation (page 223)
5.2 Ambiguity, Guilt and Multidisciplinary Method (page 225)
5.3 First Lecture: Anti-Judaism and Anti-Semitism (page 230)
  5.3.1 Theological Anti-Judaism as the Root of Anti-Semitism
  5.3.2 The New Testament Witness: Completion, not Negation
  5.3.3 Christianity, Paganism and Anti-Judaism
  5.3.4 The Deicide Charge: Conscious and Unconscious Anti-Semitism
  5.3.5 Mission to the Jews: A Sociological and Psychological Impossibility
  5.3.6 The Churches under Hitler: The Struggle for Life and Death
5.4 Second Lecture: The Mirror of Jewish Prophethood (page 242)
   5.4.1 The First Structural Analogy: Space, Territorial Insecurity and Anxiety
   5.4.2 The Second Structural Analogy: The Psychic Split, Despair, Mutual
       Attraction and Repulsion
   5.4.3 Typological Thinking, Objectification, Dehumanization and the ‘Mirror’
5.5 Third Lecture: The Dialectic of the Holy and Judaism as Perpetual ‘Thorn in the Flesh’ (page 256)
   5.5.1 ‘The Holy’ as the Foundation of Reality
   5.5.2 The Continuity of Priestly and Prophetic through the Covenant
   5.5.3 Sacramental Space: Polytheism, Imperialism and Sacral Injustice
   5.5.4 Prophetic Time: Abraham and the Pattern of Exodus, Exile and Diaspora
   5.5.5 Amos: The Broken Covenant, Exile and the Righteous Remnant
   5.5.6 The Cross and the Prophetic Spirit in Christianity
5.6 Fourth Lecture and Conclusion: Theological Answers and the Search for Reconciliation (page 272)
5.7 Conclusion (page 278)

6. Tillich’s Inclusive Dialectical of the History of Religion in the Systematic Theology and the Occasional Lectures (page 280)
   6.1 Judaism and Dialectic in Systematic Theology (page 282)
       6.1.1 Volume I: Typology, Rational Quest and Paradox
       6.1.2 Volume II: The Life and Death Struggle to Save the Old Testament
       6.1.3 Volume III: History and the Kingdom of God
6.2 Structural Similarities within the Occasional Lectures (page 310)
   6.2.1 Lectures 1 through 6
   6.2.2 Lectures 7 and 8
6.3 Conclusion (page 350)

7. Criticism and Defence of Tillich’s Method (page 352)
   7.1 Introduction (page 352)
   7.2 Earley’s Critique (page 355)
   7.3 Tillich’s Dynamic Typological Method (page 359)
       7.3.1 The Enduring Influence of Schelling
       7.3.2 The Importance of Concreteness
       7.3.3 The Pervasive Influence of the Dialectic of the Holy
   7.4 The Use and Abuse of Judaism within the Western Tradition (page 378)
       7.4.1 German Idealism’s ‘New Science of Hating Judaism’
       7.4.2 Hegel’s Incarnational Dialectic
   7.5 Conclusion (page 391)

Bibliography (page 394)