13.4 Spreat's engravings compared with today's view

Alphington

It is not possible to recreate Spreat's (1842, 63) engraving because of the tree coverage. The church is unchanged but it is difficult to see if the clock was there. The fence has been replaced by a wall and there is no longer an entrance gate and there are now gravestones.

Awliscombe

From Spreat's (1842, 41) engraving the church is unchanged and the south transept window was replaced in 1886-7 (Pevsner 2000, 141).

Aylesbeare

The tower is no longer covered in cladding and the hedge makes it impossible to recapture Spreat's engraving (1842, 42).

Berry Pomeroy

The difference between Spreat's (1842, 34) engraving is the removal of trees surrounding the church and the house on the north side. It is difficult to tell if the low building (vestry) on the south side was there and the porch, owing to the tree coverage. The wall surrounding the churchyard is still there.

Bickleigh

Spreat's (1842, 65) engraving and the present church are unchanged.

Bishop Nympton

Spreat's (1842, 18) engraving show the extended pinnacles which were shortened in 1959, other wise the church is unchanged although there were no gravestones.

Bradninch

Spreat's engraving of the church is unchanged, although the tree has been removed and because of the cottages leading up the lane to the church the perspective cannot be reproduced.

Brampford Speke

Spreat's engraving (1842, 11) and the present church are unchanged, although the tree coverage prevents an exact copy and the cottage is no longer there.

Broadclyst

Spreat's (1842, 21) engraving and the present church are unchanged although the gravestone have now been moved and placed in two straight lines, seen behind the cross.

Buckerell

It is not possible to recreate Spreat's (1842, 48) engraving because the garden is private, where the view was engraved from. The small annex next to the north transept has been removed, and the vestry at the east end formerly had a door not a window.

Buckland Monachorum

It is not possible to recapture Spreat's (1842, 61) engraving because of the houses to the west but the trees have been removed; otherwise the church remains unchanged.

Chawleigh

The impression from Spreat's (1842, 51) engraving is that the porch is central; this is an illusion, and the tower now has a niche for possible a statue but Pevsner (2000, 254) does not give any date for restoration or rebuilding.

Chittlehampton

Spreat's (1842, 26) engraved picture shows it here until 1870 when the surrounding cottages were removed. The church now stands on the north side of the square, with cottages on the west and east sides of the square. The upper portion of the tower appears unchanged.

Christow

Trees do not allow for the angle of Spreat's engraving (1842, 45) to be reproduced, but the present church remains unchanged.

Chulmleigh

It is not possible to recreate Spreat's (1842, 49) engraving because of the houses to the south of the churchyard and the addition of the wall and the trees, otherwise the present church remains unchanged.

Cockington

Spreat's (1842, 52) engraving shows a porch on the south side now removed and the entrance is now through the tower doorway. A chimney stack has been added although there is no evidence of this inside the church.

Combe Raleigh

Spreat's (1842, 19) engraving and the church remain unchanged except for the additions of crosses on the roof apexes; the photograph is at a slightly different angle because of the trees.

Crediton

Spreat's (1842, 46) engraving gives the illusion that the side façade is much higher than in reality and the gravestones have now been removed but not the chest tombs.

Cullompton

Spreat's (1842, 57) engraving and the church are the same.

Drewsteignton

Spreat's (1842, 62) engraved scene is virtually unchanged, except for the addition of the cottage on the south side of the square. The wooden lynch gate is now stone and the cottage obscures the view of the porch which was visible in the engraving.

Dunsford

It is not possible to recreate Spreat's (1842, 74) engraving because of the houses opposite the church and the narrow road. There appears to be only two windows in the engraving on the nave of the church and on the chancel three and a door, now only two and the door, altered when the chancel was built 1884-5 (Pevsner 2000, 343) and there are no gravestones.

Eggesford

It is not possible to recreate Spreat's (1842, 56) engraving because of tree coverage, but the church is unchanged.

Feniton

It is not possible to recreate Spreat's (1842, 64) engraving because of a private garden below the church, but the church remains unchanged.

Gittisham

Spreat's (1842, 34) engraving shows the alterations to the nave east window in 1873 (Pevsner 2000, 457) and the removal of the surrounding tree.

Harberton

Spreat's (1842, 39) engraving and the church are unchanged.

Heavitree

It is not possible to recreate Spreat's (1842, 8) engraving as the church was rebuilt in 1844-6 and altered again in 1890 and 1897.

Holcombe Burnell

Spreat's (1842, 2) engraving was made a year before the rebuilding in 1843, although Pevsner (2002, 485) suggests the tower and arcade must be the original. The addition is the chancel.

Ipplepen

Spreat's (1842, 55) engraving and the present church are unchanged except for the addition of a cross above the east end. There is now a house to the north of the church and the tree has been removed.

Kenn

Swete's (a, 1796 vol. III, 26) illustration shows St Andrew's situated on a plateau, surrounded by a wall with steps and no gravestones. Spreat's (b 1842, 50) engraving shows the addition of a roof to the lynch gate and the tops of gravestones, but it is not possible to see the tower door or window in Spreat's illustration. Today the entrance has been changed, and the former steps have been reused to gain access to the war memorial and the church is now entered by a path further to the west. The church in the engraving looks like it was rendered, now removed to show blocks of breccia.

Kenton

Swete's (a1796 vol. III, 19) picture shows the church on a raised plateau surrounded by a stone wall with no gravestones; whereas Spreat's (b1842, 35) engraving shows only two windows, but this is an illusion as there are three. Swete and Spreat give the impression the church was rendered, but it is built of red breccia. Spreat shows gravestones by the wall and entrance, but it is not possible to recreate these pictures because of the houses opposite.

Killerton

It is not possible to recreate Spreat's (1842, 54) engraving because of tree coverage, but the present church is unchanged, although the engraving gives the illusion of a squat church.

Littleham (Exmouth)

It is not possible to recreate Spreat's (1842, 3) engraving due to the tree coverage in the churchyard, however, the present church is unchanged.

Littlehempston

It is not possible to recreate Spreat's (1842, 40) engraving because where the men are standing a railway line was built in 1849. The apex above the window on the roof of the south aisle has been removed, otherwise the church remains unchanged.

Lympstone

Spreat's (1842, 12) engraving and the shape of the present church appear unchanged, however the church was rebuild of breccia, the roof raised, windows removed from the tower and generally heightened.

Moretonhampstead

Spreat's (1842, 66) engraving appears to be minus the chancel extension, this could be an illusion as Pevsner (2000, 66) does not mention any rebuilding, only restoration in 1904. The engraving shows a rendered church but it is built of granite.

North Molton

Spreat's (1842, 17) engraving shows the four tower pinnacles which have been removed, and because of tree coverage it is not possible to recreate the picture although the church remains unchanged.

Ottery St Mary

Spreat's (1842, 13) engraving gives the illusion that the spire of the northern tower rises from the western façade, other wise the church is unchanged.

Ottery St Mary

Spreat's (1842, 14) engraving shows the alteration to the northern façade with the addition or alteration to the northern transept; it is not possible to see the northern entrance porch in the engraving but it was there in the 1840s. The hedge has been removed and replaced by railings.

Paignton

It is not possible to recreate Spreat's (1842, 48) engraving due to tree coverage, however, the church appears to be rendered, now removed to show the red breccia, and the area surrounding the church has been developed with houses.

Pinhoe

Spreat's (1842, 10) engraving shows the rendered church before the restoration in 1879-80 and the addition of a northern transept.

Powderham

In Swete's (a1799 vol. iv, 39) the church fronts the road, surrounded by a wall and a cottage. In the engraving (b Spreat 1842, 1) the road is still in front of the church and a large entrance gate has been built, and both pictures give the impression of a rendered church, whereas today it is of red breccia. The chancel was extended in 1861 (Pevsner 2000, 692). Today the road is to the north and entrance gates removed. It is not possible to recreate the picture because of tree coverage.

Sidbury

It is not possible to recreate Spreat's (1842, 70) engraving because of the house north of the church and narrow road below the wall. The engraving gives the illusion of a fortified embattled church but it is unchanged.

Silverton

Spreat's (1842, 28) engraving shows the rendered church before the chancel was extended in 1861-3 (Pevsner 2000, 743).

South Molton

Spreat's (1842, 37) engraving show the church prior to the addition of a clerestory in 1864 (Pevsner 2000, 748), which resulted in the alteration to the roof and south façade and the addition of crosses on the roof apexes. The surrounding tombs and gravestones have been removed to the north entrance gate and laid flat like paving stones.

Stoke Canon

Spreat's (1842, frontispiece) engraving shows a view across the river, which it is not possible to recreate because of tree coverage and no bridge. The nave in the engraving looks as if it is covered with rendering, but today the stone is visible.

Stoke Gabriel

It is not possible to recreate Spreat's (1842, 73) engraving because the land opposite the church and across the river is private, however, the church appears to be unchanged and there is now a lower graveyard.

Tiverton

It is not possible to recreate Spreat's (1842, 53) engraving because of the trees in front of the church, but the church remains unchanged except for the addition of a clock on the east side of the tower.

Thorverton

Spreat's (1842, 9) engraving shows the church before the restoration in 1864 (Pevsner 2000, 803) when the north aisle and transept were built and the embattlements were added to the south aisle.

Totnes

Sprent's (1842, 23) engraving shows the church before the addition of the east window, which was added in 1878 (Pevsner 2000, 868), and the removal of the gravestones.

Upton Pyne

Sprent's (1842, 6) engraving gives the impression that the church was rendered now removed, otherwise the church is unchanged, although there were no gravestones.

Warkleigh

Sprent's (1842, 38) engraving shows a sloping roofed extension on the south side of the chancel which has been removed in the restoration of 1850 (Pevsner 2000, 888). The surrounding trees have been cleared.

Whitestone

Spreat's (1842, 7) engraving shows the church before the restorations of 1866-8 (Pevsner 2000, 906) where the south window by the tower appears to have a ramp against it, and chancel has been extended with the addition of a second window and the south transept window has been altered.

Widcombe-in-the-Moor

Spreat's (1842, 68) engraving and the present church are unchanged.

Woodbury

Spreat's (1842, 20) engraving and the present church are unchanged, although the ramped entrance and bridge over the stream are now gone.

Appendix to Chapter 13

What do we learn from antiquarians about Devon's churches pre-Victorianisation?

Appendix 13.5 Further examples of where illustrations accounts provide evidence of change

Aveton Gifford church

The church at Aveton Gifford was destroyed at 4pm on the 26th January 1943 by 190 fighter bombers returning from Plymouth during WWII, killing a little girl and injuring 20 people. All that survived was the font. Davidson visited the church in 1841 (vol.2, 885) and observed an altar screen in 'wretched taste', a piscina which had been plastered over, and the remains of a screen; and he recorded twenty two memorials.

The church was restored in 1869; therefore Davidson's documentation is a unique record of the church. Stabb's photograph (1908, 8) shows the parclose screen that was removed from the church in 1869 and replaced after the restoration in 1889 (Figs.15.80-15.81), and destroyed in the bombing. After the war the church was rebuilt in the original style at a cost of £30,000 (Pevsner, 2003, 140).

Fig.13.77: Aveton Gifford Church showing the bombed sanctuary (aveton-gifford-co.uk/facilities/church).

Sydenham Damerel

At Sydenham Damerel a freak storm in 1955 burnt out the church, leaving just the south and east walls. The church was rebuilt to the 15th century dimensions, and the 18th century north aisle was not replaced. This was due to the population of the village being half what it was 100 years ago and the cost of replacing the granite pillars. Davidson in 1843 (vol.4, 557) saw a large slate-covered barn-like building with an apse at the eastern end, granite pillars and carved rib ceiling bosses, a modern pulpit and pews, and a gallery across the west end. All the seven wall memorials and an inscribed floor stone with a cross that Davidson had recorded were lost. The photograph shows the workmen, who reused all the stone window mullions, but the tiled altar screen seen in the photograph was not replaced (Figs.15.83-15.84).

Fig.13.78: An undated photograph of Sydenham Damerel Church showing the fire damage and the decorated altar screen.

Fig.13.79: The interior of Sydenham Damerel Church 2015 (Source: author).

Lamerton

After Davidson's visit in 1829 (vol.3, 97), fire swept through Lamerton Church in 1877; his record tells us of an altar table, heavily-painted modern altar screen, and evidence of a chancel screen because of the rood loft stairs in the north chancel wall, the western gallery and the modern pulpit and pews, all of which were destroyed. The new church was rebuilt in 1879 in the same style.

Honiton

Davidson visited Honiton Church in 1829 (vol.1, 97) and documented that the vestry was in the north porch, the rood loft door had been converted into a window, the screen painted to look like marble and the loft had been converted into a western gallery for the singers, which was accessed by an covered outside staircase still visible today. The church had been restored in 1896, so we do not know what had been moved or which monuments were missing from Davidson's records, because fire destroyed the roof and the interior fittings of Honiton Church in 1911. We have Spreat's engraving of the church before the fire (Fig.15.85) and Stabb's (1911, 59) photograph to identify what has been lost: namely the full-width screen across the chancel, the cradle roof with bosses and the pews (Fig.15.86). The aisle galleries, modern desk and pulpit, two brass chandeliers and the font were all destroyed. The church is a replica of the original, but a second fire in the 1990s destroyed parts of the interior including the roof and pews, and burnt remains of the screen, can now be seen across the tower arch.

Fig.13.80: The engraving (Spreat 1842, 22) of Honiton Church shows a different roof line because of the fire in 1911 which destroyed the roof and internal fittings (Source: author).

Appendix 13.6

13.6 CD of changes found in Devon churches

James Davidson documented 499 Devon's churches between 1825 and 1850 in great detail, recording the exterior, and the internal fixtures and fittings, which provides a rich source of material to undertake a comparison with what remains today.

For the Devon churches there is a current picture of the exterior and interior and if applicable an engraving by William Short dated 1842, or a photograph by John Stabb dated 1908-1916, with which to make a comparison. There follows lists of internal fixtures and fittings that have been removed or moved, along with the missing floor and wall monuments. The date Davidson's visited the church, comments by Beatrice Cresswell's about further alterations and Pevner's notes if a church has been restored or rebuilt. The list of Devon churches is listed below.
